Article sharing: Authors

ASKALIBRARIAN

if you have questions about when, where and how you can share your articles

Identify the version of your article you want to share based on where it is in the publication process

Preprint

Your write-up of an article based on your research results and analysis.

- Not peer reviewed yet
- Typically a Word document
- What you submit to a journal

Accepted manuscript

Your article that has been peer reviewed and accepted for publication.

- Includes author-incorporated changes from peer review
- Not fully formatted or copyedited
- No journal or publisher branding

Published journal article

Your final published article that appears in a journal.

- Includes journal and publisher branding
- Has been copyedited and fully formatted
- Available in HTML and as a PDF
- Becomes the article of record superseding all other versions

No restrictions on sharing. You may want to share publicly to get early feedback.* Can be shared within your institution at any time (often in institutional repositories).

Can be shared externally after the journal's embargo period.

Sharing is limited, for example on platforms such as ResearchGate or Academia.edu, unless an article was published open access. Can always be shared in response to individual requests and in private groups.
